Poetical.

TRUE LOVE.

There is love and yet you may
Have lingering doubts about it;
I'll tell the truth and simply say
That life's a blank without it.

There is a love both true and strong,
A love that falters never.
It lives on faith and suffers wrong.
But lives and loves forever.

Such love is found but once on earth—
The heart can not repel it,
From whence it comes or why its birth,
The tongue can never tell it.

This love is mine, in spite of all,
This love I fondly cherish;
The earth may sink, the skies may fall,
This love will never perish.

It is a love that cannot die,
But like the soul, immortal,
And with it cleaves the starry sky
And passes through the portal.

This is the love that comes to stay—
All other loves are fleeting;
And when they come just turn away—
It is but Cupid cheating.

THE PASSING OF THE CLOUD.

There came a cloud over yonder hill,
When the wind was muttering low,
Round and white as the sails that fill
When the winds o'er the ocean go.

And the skirts of the cloud were snowy white,
But the heart of the cloud was black;
And the sunshine fled, and the trees in fright
Murmured and bowed them back.

And the cruel north wind whistled shrill,
And the south wind sobbed in turn,
And the east wind shrieked, "Come down and kill!"
And the west wind sighed, "Return!"

But the cloud gave heed to sob nor cry,
But swept over hill and plain;
The cloud went by in the broad, blue sky,
And the sunshine came again.

Select Story.

THE WOLF'S DEN.

PART I.

They called us the Wolves, we three brothers, we, and our old father, Baron Wolfang von Wolf. They say that we look like the animal which desolates the fold of the shepherd and carries a terror to the heart of the wandering boy or girl. Certainly we all had rather sharp teeth, except my brother Ludwig, who had inherited the beauty of my mother, and her melancholy blue eyes, fine, high-sculptured nose, and small, even white teeth, not at all like a wolf's.

We lived in a great castle, near to Szegszard on the river Sarvis, south of Pesth, and not far from the Danube, with a view from our windows which had not its equal in the world for picturesque beauty. No, there are no such hills, such skies as those. My mother was a Roumanian, and differed from my father in religion. She had died when I was born. I have nothing of her but her picture, a tress of her long, golden hair, and her book of prayers.

Some great tragedy had happened, some terrible misfortune, to my father, we never knew what. Gloom and severity were his two inseparable companions. He used the whip freely upon us, as boys and upon all his servants and laborers. He was feared and hated as few have been, and the women ran when they saw him, for they said that he had killed his own wife and would blight their children. He had, however, an old monk to teach us to read and write, a most excellent man called Frere Franz, who taught us Greek and Latin and mathematics, and how to paint and to draw, for he could illuminate his Breviary like Fra Angelico. Frere Franz took us to church and taught us to pray before the image of the Blessed Virgin. We owed to this man everything, and particularly that he used in summer to take us to his convent, which was near that lovely neighborhood where the spurs of the mountain chain, descending from Transylvania, unite with the great Alfold plain. There with the holy monks we stayed in comfort, being allowed to ride at will over the a green basin of prairie, once an inland sea, where there were no roads, having for the time the inestimable boon of liberty and the privilege of getting lost, so dear to boyhood, yet always bringing up at night at some village or market town, sometimes going even to Erdioszegh (where Ernst found his romance), and where we all had some wild adventures. Yet we always found ourselves, and got back to the holy calm of the convent and the serene companionship of those monks, who had been noblemen and soldiers in their day, and seemed to love us well. Frere Franz was the great blessing of ourselves, mitigating the troubles and the peculiarity of a destiny which we could not understand; for we were noble but poor, our only wealth the uncertain yield of vineyards, which gave usually a roughish red, spirituous, fruity-tasted wine. There was a better hillside vineyard (seldom satisfactory), which we had heard belonged to Ludwig. This yielded a white wine, with a fresh, cool taste, and pleasant faint bouquet, but we made very little of that, except in good years. One old woman, called Felehaza, who had a black mustache and severe features, was our cook and nurse, the only woman whom we ever saw in our house. Our table was served with heavy soups, big joints, and fish from the Sarvis, and vegetables in great bowls. My father ate like a wolf; we were not far behind, and we all drank of the heavy red wine—my brother Ernst too much, so that he was first silly, then quarrelsome, and then sleepy—every day at dinner. Ludwig was not so easily excited, but when he was made angry he and Ernst fought horribly, and my father would get the whip to separate them, like two angry dogs. I was not as strong as my brothers, nor could I eat and drink as they did. Some tenderness always seemed to follow me, as a child whose mother had died, and old Felehaza had ever a bit of kid boiled for me, or Frere Franz gave me some of his lentil soup on fast days, or my father told Ludwig to pour water in my wine, when I could not attack the heavy dinners which the other Wolves ate. I liked to study and read, and particularly to paint with Ludwig, who had a great room in the north turret of the castle, where he had a roll of canvas, some oil paints, and who had covered the walls with fresco.

Often I wondered where he got his saintly women's faces and his beautiful fancies. The peasant girls with whom we flirted at the village fairs, the high-born ladies whom we sometimes saw at church, none of them looked like the women in Ludwig's pictures, and he, great handsome fellow that he was, never seemed to care for women, either. Ernst and I were the Lotharios of the family, but Ludwig was sombre and gloomy, and seemed to have something in his character like my father, with whom he had a strange relationship. They rarely spoke together, and yet we heard at times long, serious and angry discussions between them, when they would shut themselves up in a room and lock the door. Ludwig was the only creature on the face of the earth that my father feared. I began to notice all these things, as I grew to be 16, and so on all these years we lived, as wild a set of barbarians as could be found in the neighborhood of the Danube. We were all fearless, expert horsemen, could shoot and fish, and, in the season of the vintage, help to gather the grape, flirt with the pretty girls who came to work in the fields, followed up the somewhat pastoral business of shearing and killing the sheep, and not entirely neglecting Frere Franz and his books and paints. That we had any future never seemed to occur to us; although the boys with whom we had played went off to be soldiers. We had once heard Ludwig ask my father to let him go to Vienna and become a soldier also. My father had answered angrily, and told us we were not to leave Szegszard unless we wished to be insulted, to get into an Austrian fortress, perhaps. Then we began to suspect that he had been guilty of some political offense; that we were ostracized, and bore a tainted name, a dreadful thing for boys to suspect. I was 18, Ernst was 20, and Ludwig was 22 when the great event of our life happened. A little carriage drawn by three fleet Hungarian horses, hung with bells, came trotting into Szegszard one fine morning, and in it was the President of the Komifat, and by his side a young lady.

I was on my shaggy pony, stopping for a moment at our wine merchant's, when I heard the President speak out in a grand, pompous voice, and say:

"Can you tell me where lives the Baron Wolfgang von Wolf?"

I took off my cap and bowed to the lady and himself, and answered:

"I am the young Count Erlody von Wolf, at your service," said I. "Can I conduct you to my father the Baron von Wolf?"

"Politely spoken, my golden-haired youth," said the President; "politely spoken; yes, I bring you a cousin from Paris, Mademoiselle Marie de Lucille Zichy."

I felt all the blood in my body go to my face. "Zichy!" that name had belonged to my mother. A cousin from Paris, and coming to our Wolf's den!

"Cousin Erlody does not seem glad to see me?" said the young lady in the most sweet, frank, pleasant voice, "but I have come—I have come to make you a visit. You must make—really you must make the best of me."

I suddenly felt I was dressed in sheepskins, that my boots of untanned leather were ragged, that my hands were brown, coarse and dirty, that I was a savage. I thought of Castle Wolf; what a place for a lady! and such a lady! For as I stole a look at her I saw a slender, delicate, tall girl, with smooth, black hair folded back from her white brow; dark blue eyes with long lashes; a red mouth full of mischief and smiles. She was dressed in dark blue cloth, with bright buttons down the front, and a little hat, with a long blue feather floating back from her lovely face. I noticed her hands, they were so small, long and lithe, and her gloves fitted her like her skin. She looked like no woman I had ever seen in my life, but she did look like—like, what? Yes.

Like Ludwig's pictures!

When I had shown the President's driver the road up to the castle, I told his Excellency, with a bow, that I would spur on my pony, and go to prepare my father for the visitors.

I saw Frere Franz in the court-yard and told him the astounding news, leaving him to break it to the Baron, while I dashed up to my room and washed my face and hands and combed my long hair. Then I called to Ludwig, who was painting in the turret. He, too, made himself decent, and we both reached the door as my father was helping the young lady to alight. She did not notice us much, being taken up with our dogs, Czilagy and Mords, two splendid wolf hounds, who had barked at every visitor we had ever had before, savage beasts, but who now were absolutely kissing her gloved hands, so sweet and gentle was she.

"Oh! what lovely dogs, what dear dogs," said cousin Lucille, who evidently knew how to win man and beast. Baron Wolfang von Wolf was a gentleman, a man of sixteen quarterings, and although he had just been killing a sheep, he did receive the lady with a stately civility. We were more like sheep than wolves before her! She, however, soon gave me her hand, and looked up in Ludwig's handsome, melancholy face, with a serene composure which was reassuring, and said: "Forgive me for shaking hands with the dogs first;" then, as Ludwig smiled and approved of her, she blushed most becomingly and accepted his proffered arm with a little tremble, which put them at once in the proper position of man and woman, of protector and protected.

All we were told was that this lady was our distant cousin, that we were to make the castle as comfortable as possible for her, and that we were to ask no questions. I saw the Baron later taking the whip to Fetehaza, who, with the privilege of an old servant, was growling over the newcomer, so I asked noue.

My mother's room, long closed, was unlocked for the guest, and she came down in a few moments, lovely, fresh, smiling, composed, praising the prospect, praising everything.

It was not long before Lucille had won Felehaza's confidence, and the dinner table boasted again a table-cloth. Old trunks and table linen were unlocked, and the Baron's silver chest yielded its treasures, the sound of hammer and chisel was heard in the rooms, and I became an upholsterer in her service, nailing up old tapestries and curtains. Lucille insisted that Ludwig should fresco her room, and she bought muslin at the village which soon fluttered in the morning breeze, from her casement, giving a refined air to our donjon keep. Oh, how she liked the dogs, the puppies, the ponies! and what a horse-woman she was! a little timid at first, but soon a seat across country that was marvelous. She would not hear of our making a change in our toilets. "No," she said; "those sheepskins were so picturesque and suited the landscape." She soon got out of Ernst the fact that he loved a young girl at Erdioszegh; she told him how to write and fold his love letters; she reproved him for drinking too much; she corrected our French, which was somewhat archaic; she absolutely trimmed the Baron's beard! A young girl from the village was introduced as parlor maid, or waiter, or what not, and Lucille soon had her in cap and apron waiting upon the Wolves at table. We were all being changed from animals to men. A woman's hand, what was it not to the sad, half-civilized and neglected boys, who had grown up in the old stone castle, without the sight of a woman.

Lucille found joy in our landscape, happiness in our out-of-door-life; she seemed always to be discovering a bit of carving, a majolica jug, an old mirror, or curious chair, which was before un-known and unnoticed. She brought in taste, that best of visitors, and love and beauty and refinement to our den. The Wolves in her presence forgot all their grossness. The young girl carried with her an atmosphere which repelled while it allured, and although alone in our Wolves' den, she was as safe as if she had been in the moon.

Something of the boy mingles in the character of such a woman as she. The Rosalinds, the Violas of great Shakspeare give us the key-note. Her jolly companionship with us for a season shut the dangerous door of sentiment. I had no mysterious fear of her, as I heard that men had of the women whom they loved; and although her Parisian fineries and pretty boots and gloves charmed my senses like a new perfume, I still felt capable of gayly criticising her gowns and ribbons, if they did not altogether suit her surroundings. Ludwig told her that her favorite pink dress was horrible, she was equally frank in despising his one broadcloth, church-going, badly-made suit. We were comrades as well as cousins, and joked each other freely.

But Pandora's box had been opened, and the troubles were sure to come out.

"Lucille goes away to-morrow; she goes back to Paris to be married," said the Baron one day, as she had departed to the kitchen to instruct Felehaza in the manufacture of a new salad. She had been with us all summer—a golden summer for the Wolves.

I felt as if an icy heart had taken the place of that warm viscera which before had beaten in my bosom, and I looked up at Ludwig. He was as pale as death. Ernst could only speak.

"So the sunshine goes out of the Wolves' castle, does it?" said he.

"Yes!" said the Baron, gloomily. "Lucille has been very charming. She will make a noble wife—an ornament to the rich and famous family which she enters. Women love luxury. They must have it. She belongs to your mother's blood! She loved luxury. I could not give it to her. We are poor."

Why had she come here—this daughter of the gods? Why had she entered our mountain fastness? That we dared not ask. We only heard and remembered that last sentence—"We are poor." The Baron permitted no questions.

It was Ernst who had the courage to speak to her of her marriage. It was a family arrangement she said, and that she supposed it was all right. She seemed to be, as we were, ignorant of all that most immediately concerned herself. The Zichys were a queer family as we could not but reflect. And then I wandered off up the high hill that looks over to the valley of the Danube, and communed with my own heart and was still. I for the first time knew that I was a man and not a boy: that I loved her, and must win her, else my heart would break—and yet what had I to offer her?

As I came home at nightfall I heard in the wood near me two horses come slowly along. I stepped behind a mighty pine tree and hid myself. It was Ludwig and with him Lucille; he had his hand on her bridle rein; she was weeping bitterly. He was telling her that he loved her; and oh! how manly and handsome he looked as he bent his pale, grave face over her.

"Oh! Ludwig! Ludwig!" said the girl looking up through tears like Anslaga, "I have loved you every hour since I came to Castle Wolfgang—but it cannot be—it cannot be."

PART II.

The wind and rain beat heavily about Castle Wolfgang. The autumn came with sighs and tears to the Valley of the Sarvis. Our grapes were all gathered, however, and the vintage had been better than usual, but the Baron, my father, seemed wrapped in a greater gloom than ever before, for the bailiff had seized some of his wine in payment of an old debt. The Baron, alas! was no manager.

I heard high words between him and Ludwig one night.

"The hillside vineyard and the white vine are mine," said Ludwig, "and you have never allowed me the yield. My grandfather left it to me in his will and you have kept it from me. Now I want it. I am going to Paris; I am going to study painting, and I claim what is mine."

"Yes, going like a fool to follow Lucille!" said my father. "Love has always been the ruin of us. If I had not loved your mother I should not now be the man who broke his parole, the Austrian officer who surrendered his trust; the disgraced and proscriebd nobleman. All for that face (which you have got Ludwig,) I gave up that which a man should hold sacred above all things—his honor—and now you turn upon me, ruined that I am, and ask me to give you money to go to Paris that you may commit the folly of trying to win Lucille from her promised husband. No! stay here, and when I die it shall be yours. Go, and I curse you!"

Ernst had gone off, we knew not where; perhaps to see again that fair face at Erdieszegh, which he had once fallen in with, on one of our visits to Frere Franz at the convent. Lucille had been away three months and Ludwig had grown every day more pale, more haggard, more sombre. We had not told each other our secret, but in our long mountain rambles, in our silent hours over the canvas, in the turret, it told itself. Sometimes he would put his hand on my head, and smoothing my hair, Ludwig would say to me: "Poor boy! poor boy!" as he walked up and down the room, and I would take his hand and kiss it, for I loved this grave, silent, noble brother, better than all in the world or in heaven, save the image of our dead mother; better than all I loved Ludwig.

But in our silent misery we would go together to the chapel and kneel there for hours before the image of the Blessed Virgin, as Frere Franz had taught us to do when we were little boys.

One day Ludwig fell into a dead faint on the stone floor of our turret room, and when we brought him to life he was in a raging fever.

Old Felehaza and I bathed his head and gave him the simple beverage made from the sweet verbena, and she wept as she saw how he looked like his mother, but the old Baron glared at him with his red eyes, and said that "he was shamming—the fever, he had it not—no," and yet he paced the room like an angry wolf all night.

The next week Ernst came home and we had a long consultation.

I had more learning and more knowledge of business than my brothers, and in the sales of our wines I had become acquainted with a wine merchant of Pesth, who had once offered to send me to Paris on his business. Leaving Ludwig in the care of Ernst and Felehaza, I rode off to see him one day, and after an hour's talk I was driving over the hills to a railway station, on my way to Paris. The world opened its great walls for the boy of nineteen to look at, and the past and present mingled in a curious dream. Sometimes my mother came and encircled me in her arms; sometimes the old father Ambrose, at the convent, came and put a crucifix at my lips; sometimes I saw Ludwig dying, and again I saw Lucille, the woman I loved—the woman he loved—and a great darkness came over me.

It was in a beautiful salon in Paris that Lucille received me. She did not know me in my French clothes, my hair cut close to my head, nor should I have known her but for her voice, so pale and sad and shadowy she looked.

"Oh! Erlody! Erlody!" said she, sadly—and she threw herself into my arms and kissed me. The first and the last time!

Her mother came down, a fine French lady, all crape, and very grand Madame Zichy.

"It was I who was so romantic," said she; "I was the French companion who induced your mother, my lovely Roumanian schoolmate, to run off with the gallant Austrian officer, your father! Ah! dear, dear! It led to sad trouble. I am wiser now, and I have made a better, much better arrangement for my Lucille. Yet she droops, she droops. It was so kind of you to take her as a visitor when we were so disturbed here last summer. Her father (you know Erlody, I mean Count Zicy) was a cousin, twice removed of your dear, dead mother—yes, you have her golden hair, your mother's though you are a Wolf—yes, a Wolf—as to your face."

"He is not one at heart," said Lucille.

There was in my luggage a roll of canvas, and in my care a consignment of wine from the hillside vineyard, a letter from Frere Franz and one from the wine merchant at Pesth.

It was not long before the widow Zichy was convinced that Lucille would never marry the gentleman she had picked out for her, and that her daughter's health required a change of air.

It was not long before Ludwig's pictures were sold, and some of his wine had been tested in Paris, that market of the world, and had been pronounced a choice variety.

With my pockets full of gold I turned my face toward Vienna. One more act to be done, and then—and then.

The story which my father had never told me was fully told me by the mother of Lucille. He had been imprudent but not guilty. He had been deeply wronged. It was possible that the cashiered officer might be restored to his place in society: that was my errand to Vienna.

PART III.

It was spring when the Wolves met again, and Ludwig was sitting by the window looking at a larch tree full of blue birds, which made him think of the blue cloth dress which Lucille had worn when she first came to the castle. He was pale and weak from long suffering and even Ernst was less ruddy than of yore. The Baron, with one hand paralyzed, sat by the fire, which still glowed in the broad, old fashioned chimney place. Heaven had struck down the hitherto untamable, bitter, aggrieved and violent man. It was a sad spectacle.

I had been too late with my message from Vienna. He could never again go to salute his sovereign to claim again those trappings which he had forfeited. His sixteen quarterings could now do him no good in the world.

Would they in the next? Frere Franz sat by his chair and talked and read to him, and led him to pray to be forgiven for his injustice to his sons; to pray that the cruel recklessness of youth and the bitter severity of age might be atoned for.

And who is this who drives up the long, winding road to the castle, with three Hungarian horses hung with bells, in a light carriage? A lady in a blue cloth dress and a hat with a long feather. By her side sits an elderly lady. I see them coming, and again with our noble wolfhounds, Czillagy and Maros, I go down to meet them. As I pass a great mirror in the hall, I see myself, a young Parisian in modern clothes, I remember the savage in sheepskin with long golden curls—that I was last year; a sharp sword cuts to my heart, as I wish I were again there!—that young barbarian. The knowledge of the world had not brought to me happiness. Alas! when did it ever!

I go up with dear Lucille, and see Ludwig extend his arms to her, I see her fall upon his breast, as he bends over to kiss her.

I hear faintly their thanks, their blessings, as I have heard all things, in a dream.

* * * * *

I have two dear sisters and many nephews and nieces, for my Ludwig Ernst are both married. The old Baron died long ago. I come to them from my convent in the neighborhood of the Ermeitek. For when you look for the Frere Franz of to-day, as you visit my old convent where I spent my boyhood, and to which I came after the world ceased to be my home—this spot where I bid the sorrows of childhood, and where I have soothed with prayer the heartbreak of manhood—you will see that when the old one died the Bishop gave that title to the young neophyte who had been Count Erlody Wolfgang von Wolf.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

Friday, Nov. 11, 1881.

The President has issued his proclamation recommending Thursday, November 24th as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

More Cuba cigars are exported annually from Cuba than the island produces tobacco; more champagne imported from France than is produced in its vineyards for home and foreign consumption; more olive oil from Italy than is manufactured from olive trees.

Hon. Joseph C. Bucher, Democrat was re-elected judge of the twentieth district, composed of the counties of Union, Snyder and Mifflin by 900 majority. In 1880 these counties gave 1441 Republican majority. Such a popular expression of confidence is eminently satisfactory.

Secretary Blaine's circular letter on the subject of the Panama Canal is discussed by the London Times, which fails to see why the United States should object to England or France joining in the guarantee of the neutrality of the canal. The Times admits that the canal should be "placed outside of the region of warfare."

The Chicago Times quotes the Constitution of the United States and says: "Mr. Arthur's legal term of office will expire on the 20th day of September, 1885."—This is on the ground that the term of office is four years, and Mr. Arthur became President on September 20, 1881. This view of the case is original if not convincing. The next President will go into office on the 4th of March 1885, however.

The Pennsylvania R. R. has established a fast train from Philadelphia, leaving that city at an early hour in the morning and arriving at Harrisburg at half past seven o'clock. Philadelphia newspapers are delivered at points as far distant as Martinsburg W. Va. before noon of each day. This is wonderful speed truly, and the railroad company deserves praise for furnishing such an accommodation to the traveling and reading public.

The Cincinnati Enquirer calls President Arthur's attention to the fact that there is such a thing as too much harmony in the Republican party, and respectfully suggests to his excellency the wisdom of guarding against it. "When these able statesmen get mad at each other" continues the Enquirer, "they 'peach' like common cutthroats, all of which is in the interest of the public. When the harmony is perfect they help each other hide the plunder. We trust the President sees the point."

At a meeting held at the Union League in Philadelphia, on the 1st of July, 1881, the eighteenth anniversary of the death of General John Fulton Reynolds at Gettysburg, it was resolved to form an association to erect an equestrian statue of that heroic soldier. Mr. J. E Temple subscribed twenty-five thousand dollars. A circular has been issued to all soldiers who served with Gen. Reynolds, asking subscriptions for the erection of the statue. Contributions however small, will be received and should be sent to J. G. Rosengarten, 532 Walnut street, Philadelphia.

PENSIONS.

During the term of Mr. Bentley as Commissioner of Pensions, he expressed the opinion that millions of money were annually paid to those who were in no way entitled to governmental aid. A very large number of persons throughout the country shared this opinion, and Mr. Bentley's successor, Col. Dudley, has increased the number of believers in fraud. He has submitted to the Secretary of the Interior a recommendation that Congress be asked to appropriate the enormous sum of $100,000,000 for disbursement by his office during the next fiscal year in payment of annual and accrued pensions. He asks, farther, that an immediate appropriation of $20,000,000 be made to pay all arrears of pensions. It seems incredible that such gigantic ums can be required to pay legitimate pensions, or that the appropriation should annuanlly grow larger, so many years after the war. There ought to be a rigid investigation of all claims those found to be fraudulent thrown out at once and the swindlers sent to jail. The people do not object to granting pensions to the deserving, but are decidedly averse to paying the expenses of a lot of lazy bummers who are unwilling to earn a living. It is not impossible to ascertain who are entitled to draw pensions, and the proper officials should be given all requisite powers and facilities for protecting the people from this contemptible kind of robbery.

THE ELECTION

Last Tuesday, the Democrats of the State succeeded in defeating their candidate for State Treasurer by apathy and by votes cast for Wolfe. The returns are not all in but from appearances, at this writing, Baily is elected by a plurality of 5,000 or 6,000. The Democrats have no reason to feel proud of this result. A better opportunity for achieving a triumph was never afforded, but, with the blindness peculiar to the party, the chance was overlooked and a needless defeat has been met. The cry of "Know Nothing" raised against Mr. Noble by William L Scott and his backers, lost Mr. Noble many votes. Much trading was done of county tickets, and this worked injury.

One pleasing result was attained—John Cessna was defeated for Judge in the Bedford district, "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

THE RESULT ELSEWHERE.

New York was carried by the Democrats by 12,000 to 15,000 majority, and it is probable that the legislature is Democratic. W. W. Astor, the millionaire candidate for Congress in the Eleventh district, was badly beaten. He spent thousands of dollars during the campaign.

In Wisconsin the Democrats made large gains and claim the State.

Mississippi gave an over-whelming majority for the Democratic ticket.

The Readjusters have probably carried Virginia and Mahone and the Republican repudiators have triumphed. Republicans must feel proud of their success in defrauding the people of the State.

Nebraska, Massachusetts, Colorado, Minnesota, and Connecticut went Republican.

THE DAKOTA JOB.

It is rumored that the Republicans in Congress purpose admitting Dakota as a State. This would be simply an outrage, as the territory has a population of only 135,000, and that is fluctuating. Such rotten borough States as this are admitted solely for the votes they give in Congress, and it is as much a fraud as cheating at elections—morally at least. There are one or two Western States now that ought to be reduced to territories, as they are virtually the property of certain rich men who regularly purchase United States Senatorships for themselves, and even then fail to render any services. The New York World is of the opinion that the plot to admit Dakota will miscarry and gives as a reason, that the Republicans are counting without Mahone and Davis, "and without Mahone and Davis, be it remembered, the Republicans cannot count. To admit into the Senate two stalwart Republicans from a new bogus commonwealth would be to spoil the market for Mahone and Davis, and Mahone and Davis may be trusted not to 'givethemselves away.'"

BANK DIRECTORS AND EXAMINERS.

All the rascality connected with the plundering of the Mechanics' National Bank, of Newark, has not been told. The latest revelation is the stealing of $50,000 of the bank's money some years since, by Henry B. Marchbank, formerly corresponding clerk. Baldwin, the cashier, knew of this defalcation, but his own peculations were so great that he failed to denounce Marchbank for fear that an examination would follow and his own misdeeds be brought to light. He therefore dismissed Marchbank, and suffered the theft to pass unrevealed. The defaulting clerk has been arrested and held in $10,000 bail.

The utter ruin of this large financial institution will not tend to increase the confidence of the public in the security of national banks, and will lead to the very natural inquiries, "Do bank directors direct?" and "Do bank examiners examine?" If directors are content to take no part in the management of the bank, and permit their cashiers to conduct all the business without supervision and control, then defaulting will continue wherever cashiers are dishonest men. In the case of the Mechanics' bank, the directors knew nothing whatever of the transactions going on under their very noses, and the president was incapacitated by age and infirmities from taking any active part in business. Under such circumstances only, could it be possible for a cashier to make away with two millions and a half of money and bankrupt an establishment ranking highest in the State. The officers were derelict in their duties, and will be likely to pay dearly for their negligence.

But what kind of an idea is the community to form as to the value of bank examiners? Assuming that Mr. Shelley, the examiner of the broken bank, was free from criminal complicity with Baldwin, of what earthly use were his services. The robberries of Baldwin began in 1873 and since that time the examiner has visited the bank a dozen times or more and, presumably, inspected the books and accounts. If he made these inspections as thoroughly as the nature of the case permitted and with an honest desire to protect the stockholders and depositors, then the system is worthless. Of what use are yearly or half yearly examinations when a cashier can steal $2,500,000 in eight years. It is claimed in favor of the examiner that he cannot determine whether sums said to be due from other banks are just and correct. Possibly, but this does not help the matter. If he cannot, it is undeniable evidence that the present plan of bank examining is utterly worthless, Only the accounts of dishonest cashiers imperatively demand close inspection, and these, it appears, are the ones from which examiners can learn no facts.

It is quite likely that from this gigantic financial crash a demand may arise for a better system of management and for a plan of examining that will give protection to the public. In that case Baldwin's crime will not be unproductive of good. That there is need of change will scarcely be denied just at present.

Vennor's Predictions.

Our readers have perhaps lost much of their faith in the weather prophet, if indeed they ever had any, but some interest may yet attach to his predictions. In his Almanac he says of the present month that it will probably enter cold and decidedly wet, but this condition will suddenly, after the first week, give place to open and genial weather again nearly everywhere, with a disappearance of frosts even in Northern New York and Canada for a marked period. We may expect some of the finest—at any rate, most enjoyable—weather of the season during this month at New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, and in Canada our "Indian Summer." In western sections the fore and latter part of the month are likely to be disagreeable, but he does not anticipate much trouble from snow-falls or blockades this winter until December. Should such occur, however, it will likely be found that the dates of the disturbances will be very nearly the same as those of the November of 1880. Possibly there may be a period of unusual warmth in proximity to the middle of the month. This month will be marked by periods of balmy and brilliant autumn weather, as in the year 1877.

Cuticura

Scrofulous Itching and Scaly Humors of the Skin, Scalp and Blood Cured.

MIRACULOUS CURE.

I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession, such as iodide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use the Cuticura Resolvent internally, and the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally. He did so and was Completely Cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with no scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months. Reported by
F. H. BROWN, Esq., Barnwell, S. C.

The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.

Sixteen months since, an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good result, until I used the Cuticura Resolvent internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally, which entirely cured me, so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.

A signal service station is to be established at Williamsport. This is in compliance with the suggestion of Judge D. L. Rhone of Wilkes-Barre, who has made a study of the subject and become convinced that this section of country needs a station to arrive at anything like satisfactory predictions.

The first snow of the season fell on Friday last. For half an hour or so the air was filled with flakes which melted when they reached the earth. In Erie six inches of snow fell and in Mauch Chunk about an inch with the mercury at twelve degrees above zero. At Scranton and throughout the interior of New York there were falls of snow.

Diphtheria is raging in various parts of the State and appears to be spreading rapidly. No cases have been reported in this neighborhood, so far as our knowledge extends, but parents cannot be too watchful of their children, should the dreaded disease make its appearance. Teachers in public and private schools ought to pay strict attention to the subject, and send home any child found to be suffering from diphtheria. The disease is dangerously contagious and in a crowded school room will spread like wild-fire. The only safe plan is to refuse to admit scholars who have any symptoms of diphtheria.

The poor sufferer that has been dosing himself with so-called Troches and thereby upset his stomach without curing the troublesome cough, should take our advice and use DR. BULL'S Cough Syrup and get well.

There was considerable noise and quarreling on Main Street, Wednesday night. Two or three men essayed the part of peace-maker and were promptly knocked down. One of these days the Town Council may think it worth while to pay an officer to keep order at late hours of the night.

MAGIC IN THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

N. McRea, Wyebridge, Ontario, writes: "I have sold large quantities of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil; it is used for colds, sore throat, croup, etc., and in fact for any affection of the throat it works like magic. It is a sure cure for burns, wounds and bruises.

It is proposed to have a horse fair in Sunbury, next June. There will be a three days' meeting and purses aggregating $1200 will be offered. If properly managed there is hardly a doubt that the undertaking will prove successful, both as regards pleasure and money. The purses are sufficiently large to draw good horses and it has been proved times without number that fast trotting will attract crowds of spectators.

Astronomers are on the lookout for the star of Bethlehem, last seen in 1572, when it shone so bright as to be visible at noonday, then fading away, assumed various hues until it disappeared. This wonderful star is believed to have been seen in 1264 and 945, and its apparent period extended backward would indicate that it appeared about the time of the birth of Christ. Hence its name. Its place is near the constellation Cassiopeia.

"What every one says must be true," that "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup" has no equal for coughs and colds. Try it. Price 25c. nov.

A fellow is travelling through the State selling what purport to be fine mackerel at very low rates. Farmers should be on their guard against this man, as he is a swindler. The half barrels of the fish that he sells are filled with rubbish, with a thin layer of mackerel on top. It is always the best policy to purchase goods of established dealers who have reputations to maintain and who can be found when complaints are necessary.

It may not, perhaps, be known that a man wearing dark clothes is more liable to infection from contagious disease than he who wears light colored garments, because particles which emanate from diseased or decaying bodies are much more readily absorbed by dark than by light fabrics. This is easy of proof. Expose a light and a dark coat to the fumes of tobacco for five minutes, and it will be found that the dark one smells stronger than the other of tobacco smoke and it will retain the odor longer.

State Superintendent Higbee has issued a circular calling a convention of all the Superintendents of public schools of the Western counties of the State to meet in Pittsburg on the tenth of January next, to continue in session for three days. A convention of the remaining counties is called to meet in Reading on the 17th day of January. It is the design of the State Superintendent to gather such information from papers read before the convention as to enable the making of the codification of the school laws of the State.

We would caution our readers against making purchases of watches, jewelry, &c., of itinerant merchants. The buyer never receives the worth of his money and is sure to regret his action. The only safe way is to buy of reliable merchants, who are known and respected, and who can be relied upon to sell goods of the quality represented. It may be accepted as an invariable fact, that wandering peddlers can never fairly compete with established dealers, who have reputations for honesty and fair dealing to maintain.

Owing partly to the inclement weather and partly to the fact that there is always a great deal of sameness in their entertainments, Howorth's Hibernica and Mirror of Ireland appeared to quite a slim audience last Thursday evening. There were several new faces noticeable, among them Mr. James Hearne, who acted the part of Dublin Dan with a great deal of spirit. He is a fine singer and dancer and is decidedly the best we have seen in that role. He kept the audience in good humor throughout the performance. The balance of the company is of about the average.

HOW'S THE BABY?

"How's the baby?" "His croup is better this morning, thank you. We gave him some of Thomas' Eclectric Oil as you advised, doctor, and shall give him some more in an hour or so." Next day the doctor pronounced the youngster cured.

On Sunday evening November 6th, at the Lutheran church, after the usual evening service, Mr. Edward Ringler and Miss Mary Ellen Fornwald were united in matrimony by Rev. F. P. Manhart. It was the purpose to have the affair kept as quiet as possible, but nevertheless the church was filled to overflowing. Mr. O. C. Evans and Miss Emma Brooks were groomsman and bridesmaid. The ceremony was performed without the least jarring. The couple were in waiting in the basement of the church and marched to the altar immediately upon the close of the sermon by the pastor. The newly married couple left for East Toledo, Ohio, on the noon train on Monday, where Mr. Ringler is engaged as telegraph operator in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

Oliver Twist.

One of the best, if not the best, of Charles Dickens' wonderful creations, is the story of Oliver Twist. Any person who has read this book can never forget the thrilling interest that is attached to the character of Nancy; her fidelity and loving confidence, which could not be shaken by crime, misfortune or even brutality. And at last her tragic end makes her one of the few characters which will never be forgotten. The story has been dramatized and played in every theatre through the country and never loses its interest. The Seymour & Stratton Standard Theatre Company will present it at the Opera House, this Friday, evening, November 11th. It carries its own apparatus for new and startling scenic effects never before introduced outside of the large theatres. Every one should take the opportunity of witnessing a first class play.

[Cario, (Ill.) Radical Republican.]

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT IT.

"What do you know about St. Jacob's Oil?" said one of our oldest subscribers. This was a fair question, and we answer that we are reliably informed, that a gentleman of this city who has suffered untold agony, and spent a mint of money to get relief from Rheumatism, in desperation bought some and tried it, and declares that it is the best remedy for rheumatism he ever heard of.

Round About Roaringcreek.

Buckwheat sells at hereabouts at from $1.25 to $1.50 per bushel.

Apples are scarce and as a matter of course the price is advancing.

We bespeak for the COLUMBIAN in its new sanctum abundance of success, with scores upon scores of new subscribers.

Parties and plays are numerous of late; one at the Widow Carl's, at Washington Adams', David Helwig's and Rudolph Yeager's within the last few days.

Among those who have departed this life are Mrs. Daniel Roup; George Oscar Hower, aged a little over two and a half years. The latter was a grand-son of the former; and died about thirty-six hours after his grandmother. Although himself not knowing of her death he said a few moments before expiring: "I am going to grandmother."

Small Pox.

The dreaded disease has made its appearance in Orangeville, and one death, that of Mrs. Cyrus B. White, has already occurred. The wife of D. K. Sloan, who attended Mrs. White, was attacked, as was also a little girl named Risewick who lives in Mr. Sloan's family. It is not known how the disease was brought to the town, so far as we have learned. A suggestion is made that the clothing of a son of Mr. Sloan who has been in Philadelphia became contaminated there, but this hardly seems credible. Every effort will be made to confine the disease to the place where it now exists and with this end in view Mr. Sloan has authorized us to publish the following notice:

Orangeville Nov. 7th, 1881.

EDITOR COLUMBIAN:

Please insert the following:

We are sorry to inform our patrons and the public that our family is afflicted with the small pox, and to prevent if possible the further spread of the contagion, we have closed our store for the present until further notice.

Can Indians Attend School?

Several Indian boys and girls have been living at and near Millville during the summer, as has been mentioned in the COLUMBIAN. It was deemed advisableto have them attend the public schools of the district, but the question arose whether they were entitled to the privilege. We are informed that a letter was sent to Dr. Higbee, State Superintendent, asking his opinion and that a reply was received from him stating that the children were entitled to school privileges.

The Greenwood school board did not deem this conclusive, and when some of the Indians applied for admission to one of the schools in the district, they were refused. This action will probably lead to the departure of the Indians, and in fact some of them did go away on the noon train over the L. & B. R. R. on Monday of last week. Dr. Higbee is presumably versed in all matters pertaining to the public schools of the State and it may be inferred has legal backing for his opinion. How the matter is to be settled remains to be seen. There may be further correspondence between the parties that may lead to an amicable settlement of the question, which is one of interest to all taxpayers.

Since the above was written the School Board have reformed their decision and agreed to admit the children.

Illegality of Transfer Policies.

Very many of the Mutual Insurance Companies are doing a transfer business. That this is illegal will be apparent by consulting the law which took effect July 12th, 1881. By the provisions of this law the application and a copy of the By-laws form a part of the contract. The application and By-laws of another company cannot be accepted as being the contract of the company issuing. Policies issued without a regular application are not worth, in law, the paper on which they are written. Parties holding policies cannot be compelled to pay assessments and forfeitures cannot be made legal. In case of contest as to payment of claim, in absence of fraudulent application, action could be brought against companies for obtaining money under false pretenses, the penitentiary staring the officers in the face. Speculative policy holders prefer transfering at a nominal rate, rather than pay assessments. This system is ruinous to Mutual Insurance Companies. Those companies who do this kind of business will shortly regret that they ever adopted it. Mutual insurance business must be purified and when companies take hold of this matter in earnest, it will grow and become far more popular than any other system of insurance yet introduced. We condemn "grave-yard insurance," first, last and all the time. Legitimate Mutual Insurance is the best system and properly conducted will supercede all other systems. Let companies protect themselves, and the people will give them their confidence. Harrisburg Every Saturday Night.

The above fully expresses our views on this subject and is in harmony with our uniform practice with regard to transfers. We have persistently refused to accept transfers, desiring to build up a substantial business on applications regularly made out to the company. We have not been slow to recognize the ruinous tendency of this system. It is not nor can it be a part of the policy of our company. We too, in common with all right thinking people, are desirous of a purification of this business. The most pronounced enemies of Mutual Insurance companies confess that an honest, legitimate business may be done. Such is our aim and we will always be found ready to second any such measures as will tend to secure a thoroughly honest business. There are species of impositions against which it is practically impossible for companies to guard—notably fraudulent applications. But when fraud is disclosed by investigation, this company stands ready always to aid in enforcing such legal measures as will lead to the apprehension and punishment of all guilty parties.

Row and Rioting.

On Sunday last, information was lodged with B. P. Fortner, a justice of the peace in Catawissa, charging Freas Guinn, Samuel Jones Jr., Stanley G. Ellis, Charles Brown and Daniel Geiger Jr. with malicious mischief. The prisoners, all of whom are minors, were intoxicated on the previous night and damaged the property of sundry persons. Warrants were issued and the young men were arrested. The justice held them in $100 bail, each, to appear at the next term of court.

On Monday Mr. John Guinn, father of one of the boys, obtained a warrant for the arrest of Fred Smith who sold the boys liquor. He was held in $200 bail, but his bondsmen subsequently surrendered him, when he was re-arrested, brought to this town and turned over to Sheriff Ent. He was afterwards taken before Judge Elwell who admitted him to bail in the sum of $200.

Freas Guinn, one of the boys arrested, was bound over to answer the charge of representing himself to be of age, Smith's barkeeper being the prosecutor.

These arrests will doubtless be productive of good results, in that they will make the saloon keepers cautious about selling liquor to improper persons, and will tend to stop disorderly and drunken behavior on the streets of Catawissa.

Widow Bedott.

The people of Bloomsburg are fortunate this year in having entertainments of exceptional merit presented for their delectation at the Opera House. Another rich treat is in store for them. On Tuesday evening next Mr. Niel Burgess, the talented young comedian, will appear in his inimitable rendition of Widow Bedott in the amusing comedy of that name. Mr. Burgess is one of the brightest stars in the dramatic galaxy, and deserves the heartiest of welcomes by our people. The play is irresistibly funny and those who do not witness it next Tuesday will have cause for regret. It is to an unexpected chain of circumstances that we are indebted for Mr. Burgess' visit, but if he is greeted by a large and appreciative audience he may be induced to come again. It is not likely that we shall have anything as good of its kind as Widow Bedott, this winter, and the opportunity for enjoyment should not be missed. The prices have not been increased, as is usual for the better class of performances, and that should suffice to fill the house. To those who have never seen the play we would say that it is one of the funniest on the stage and Mr. Burgess' impersonation of the Widow is wonderfully clever. His make-up, voice, gestures and facial expressions are so admirable that it is difficult to conceive that it is a man and not a woman, who is playing the part. Mr. Burgess will be supported by an excellent company and the play will be put upon the stage in the best manner. We conscientiously advise all our readers to attend this performance, as they will have an evening of unalloyed pleasure. The Boston Herald says: "The Widow Bedott, as personated in Neil Burgess, is as exact a conception of the character as it must have existed in the mind of the original writer of the "Bedott Papers" as can be imagined, although the actor's personation of this eccentric individual is much more full and complete than the original—a rounding out and filling up, in fact, of what the original only gives a hint. In every detail and particular, Mr. Burgess is faithful to the ideal he has formed, and the thousands who laughed until the tears flowed over the "Bedott Papers" when they first appeared, would find their mirthfulness a thousand times increased by the stage representation, besides accepting the clear definition of what the principal character must have been.

The Result in the County.

The entire Democratic ticket was elected in the county by an average majority of about 1600. As all the returns have not been received we defer the publication of a table of votes until next week, when the full official figures will be given. The regular ticket was voted as a rule, except for the office of Register and Recorder, for which W. H. Jacoby ran as an independent. G. W. Sterner, the regular nominee, was successful, beating Jacoby by over 1500 votes. The vote in the county was very light being one-third less than that cast for President last year. In Bloomsburg there was a falling off of one-fourth. The following is the vote of the town complete. In 1880 there were 853 votes cast; this year only 630.

By the unthinking, Burdock has been considered a weed, and its luxuriant growth, unpleasant smell, etc., has rendered it, to those "not knowing its virtues," a nuisance, and yet the root has long been acknowledged by savants as most invaluable as a diuretic aperient and blood purifier. Burdock Blood Bitters embody all its good qualities. Price $1, trial size 10 cents.

CONSUMPTION.

IMPORTANT TO THE PUBLIC AS WELL AS THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

Hall's Journal of Health, referring to consumption, makes the following important statement:

"Consumption usually begins with a slight dry cough in the morning, then, on going to bed getting more and more frequent, with more and more phlegm, increasing debility, thinness of flesh, shortness of breath, and quickness of pulse. In fatal cases its average is about two years; hence the importance of arresting the disease at as early a stage as possible, and the sooner rational means are employed for this purpose the greater the chance of success. The disease is owing to an irritation commencing in the throat and extending to the lungs, so that their action is interfered with, and the blood does not receive sufficient oxygen to purify it. The most marked sign of lung disease is emaciation; and the most positive indication of returning health is increase in weight.

So speaks Hall's Journal of Health, and we may add that in desperate cases; and, in fact, in all cases of consumption, or troubles of the throat and lungs, immediate relief may be obtained and a permanent cure effected by the use of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs, a medicine known for more than thirty-five years as an unfailing remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis and all pulmonary and pectoral diseases. That the worst cases of consumption have been cured by the use of Hall's Balsam has been attested to by the thousands who have used it, or who have been cognizant of its wonderful medical efficacy. nov. 11-6w

CUTLERY.

Everybody seems surprised at the extent of our stock of Cutlery. In no store in the county can such a variety of patterns be seen. In Scissors and Shears we have all sizes and at various prices according to quality, the better grades being our specialty. Pocket knives any quality from 10 cents to 4.50 each. The large quantities of fine Razors we sell is a strong recommendation as to their superiority. A lady's pride is her table and nothing adds more to its attraction than a handsome set of knives and forks, our line is large, new patterns and low prices for reliable goods.

We have just opened a handsome line of carving knives and forks, new designs with patent rests, prices from 50 cents to 4.50 per pair. Call and see them.

STOVES.

Cold weather is near at hand and already many are looking around for stoves. The manufacturers have been over-crowded with orders, and it is almost impossible to get them. We have already received several and are daily adding to our stock. Owing to the universal satisfaction the Argand has given we still keep it as our leading base heating stove, and if you wish to see a perfect beauty call and look at this year's pattern; a little high in price it's true, but in this age the people demand handsome stoves and the more handsome they are the more they cost. We have a variety of other very nice stoves at prices within the reach of all. The Gold Medal is the largest and handsomest base heating stove for the money brought to this town. In 1879 we introduced Spear's new Silver Moon Heater for heating two or more rooms and owing to the great satisfaction they have given, our trade has steadily increased on them. We warrant every one to give perfect satisfaction and have got to hear the first word of complaint or take one back. For ease of management, economy of fuel, great draft and radiating powers, they stand without an equal. Our long experience together with that of Mr. Isaiah Hagenbuch, who has charge of our Stove and Tinware Department, has enabled us to study the wants of the people and make our selections accordingly. We cordially invite all in want of Stoves to give us a call before purchasing elsewhere, and examine our stock which we shall consider no trouble to show you. Stove repairs of all kinds furnished to order, grates and fire brick for the common cook stoves constantly on hand.

The Clover Crop.

A Jerseyman writes to the Country Gentleman: "The wise farmer is constantly on the lookout for anything that will retain the fertility of his soil. He wishes the best of crops, but at the same time dreads the idea of exhausting the land. What will it profit him if he raises large crops, but loses the fertility of the soil? The clover plant is now largely looked to as the means by which the soil can be kept in "good heart," and the looking is in the right direction. Clover does not have, as long experience teaches, a way of building up what other crops have torn down—of restoring what others have taken away—in fact, of making good in some manner, the loss sustained by growing wheat, barley, etc. Let us find some reason for this recuperative power of the clover plant. In the first place it exposes a large amount of leaf surface to the air and sunlight, and is able to transpire a large quantity of moisture. It has been carefully estimated that an average acre of clover sends off from its foliage over sixteen thousand pounds, or eight tons, of water in twenty-four hours, while an acre of wheat under the same circumstances will transpire only about two tons, or one-fourth as much. The clover plant is, therefore, a much more active pump for raising water from the soil to the air. But every pound of water has more or less salts dissolved in it, and these are left behind after the evaporation in the leaves. The clover plant is able to exist on a weaker solution than the wheat plant, because it uses so much of it, and this is an important factor in the success of the clover crop. To illustrate this point it may be said that one man may profitably manufacture salt from sea water and another would starve at the industry owing to the inferior facilities for working up the weak solution. The clover plant is also a deep feeder, and is able to bring up food elements from below the reach of surface-growing plants. In this way it concentrates food, or in other words, gathers it from far and near. The clover plant is a "close feeder," as is termed, and also a deep feeder. Now, how does it enrich the soil and prepare it for large crops to follow? The clover plant grows the whole season through. Barley, for example, ripens its grain in midsummer, and its growth is finished in not far from four months, while the clover goes right on with its work, taking up the food elements as they are liberated in the soil and fixing them into its own structure. The success of clover as a recuperative crop is largely due to its long season of growth. The question of the source of the supply of nitrogen to crops is a difficult one and is not by any means fully answered. Dr. Lawes, whose experiments at Rothamstead are classic, is of the opinion that clover does not get its nitrogen from the free nitrogen of the air, but gathers it from the nitrates and other nitrogenous compounds that are constantly forming in the soil. The clover, being a close and deep feeder, and growing through a long season, is much better able to seize upon the element and apporiate it to its own use. This seems reasonable, and has weighty proofs on its side of the long and accurately conducted experiments at Rothamstead. The clover has thus pumped up from below, through a long season, a large amount of food material, which it has stored up in its large roots near the surface of the ground; food that succeeding crops profit by, because they are not such close and deep feeders, and their period of life is too short to gather their own food, when widely scattered, so successfully as the clover.

Collecting Fall Waste.

Many persons feel the want of manure, and indeed there are few who have more than they can use. Where it is scarce, the first thought is to buy, and often this is the best plan; but in many cases one might make considerably by a little care for articles which usually go to waste.

We know that there many things recommended that are of little account; things which involve hard labor, and yet realize but little in the end. Such are often found in the various schemes for making manure out of tan bark, saw dust, swamp muck, and so forth, which once in a while and under peculiar circumstances may pay for themselves, but are as a general thing little more than time thrown away.

But it is always a good thing to keep all parts of one's place in a neat and nice condition, and the material gathered together in this way into the compost heap will genially pay for itself. However careful may be a farmer or gardener to keep things clean, there will often be odd corners that will be left by the pressure of work to grow up to coarse vegetation. If this be cut when leisure time comes it will generally pay in the compost heap. At this yeason of the year, especially, there is often a great quantity of vegetable refuse of one sort or another lying about. It will pay to collect it, and especially is this true of leaves when they are in any great quantity and not far away.

We have known persons with pretty good judgment to hesitate about taking a second crop from a piece of grass land in not very good condition because they thought it would be running the ground too hard to do so. They say it is best to leave the vegetation on the ground to rot. This is all very well if it did rot; but little of it does. It mostly dries up and the best matter is lost. It would pay much better to mow and put into the barnyard or compost heap, and then return it in the shape of top dressing afterwards. The extra labor in a case like this pays very well.

Above all it is a good thing for those who have no horse or cow—no barnyard—to save the little waste material for a compost heap. Every garden might have one in some by place, not exposed to view. It is an inducement to have a clean place, and then there's profit in it.—Germantown Telegraph.

DUCKS.—Less is known about the diseases of ducks than of fowls. They are, in our experience, best hatched by hens, and kept in a dry pen for several weeks. Give plenty of grass frequently renewed, keep water always before them in shallow vessels and feed often. A pen of boards a foot high, covered with laths nailed across the top, with one corner or one end covered to exclude the rain, is all that is required. This pen should be frequently shifted upon dry, grassy ground. If one is noticed moping, swelled up or out of sorts in any way, give soaked bread and milk red with cayenne pepper. The best are Rouens, Aylesburys, Pekins and Black Cayugas. Points of excellence for common purposes are the size and number of eggs.

SPEER'S PORT GRAPE WINE.

Physicians employ only Speer's Port Grape Wine in their practice in all cases where a pure wine is called for, and do all in their power to foster and encourage its production, for the reason that pure Port Wine is a difficult thing to get, and they are loth to prescribe a doubtful or inferior article. Hundreds of New York doctors have visited Speer's vineyards, but twelve miles from New York, and examined and tested the wines. For sale by C. A. Kleim, druggist, Bloomsburg, Pa.

A Paradise of Fish Stories

If any one wants real choice, reasonable fish stories, he should go to Minnesota. Folks have no fancy for the incredible up there; the facts are so plenty that exaggeration is simple folly. A party of anglers were seated around in a Minnesota depot, with a fine string of fish, a few days ago, waiting for a train, and killed time by relating their experiences. Several pretty stout yarns were narrated, when a long-armed Minnesotian, who appeared to be a resident of the town, and had apparently taken a great interest in the stories, interrupted the meeting by saying that he was possessed of facts that would discount any that had been cited. What he was about to tell was true, because it had been his own experience. Alluding to some remarks that had been made about the rapid growth of fish in Minnesota waters, he said that four years ago he caught a three pound bass. As he did not want small fish he threw the body back into the water, but before doing so tied a little toy tin whistle to its tail. Three years later he caught the same fish, which weighed ten pounds, and the tin whistle had grown to be an enormous fog horn. The statement was not disputed.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Philadelphia, March 1, 1882. Messrs. Ely Bros., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.—Gents: About Oct. 1, 1880, I gave your Cream Balm a trial with the most satisfactory results. I was troubled with Chronic Catarrh and gathering in my head, was very deaf at times and had discharges from my ears, besides being unable to breathe through my nose; before the second bottle of your remedy was exhausted I was cured and to-day enjoy sound health for which please accept my sincere thanks. C. J. Corbin, 923 Chestnut street. Field Manager, Philadelphia Pub. House.

Messrs. White & Bardick, druggists, Ithaca, N. Y.—My daughter and myself, great sufferers from Catarrh, have been cured by Ely's Cream Balm. My sense of smell restored and greatly improved. C. M. Stanley, dealer in boots and shoes, Ithaca, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

The politest man in Boston has been discovered. He was hurrying along the street the other night when another man, also in violent haste, rushed out of an alley way and the two collided with great force. The second man looked mad, while the polite man, taking off his hat, said: "My dear sir, I don't know which of us is to blame for this violent encounter, but I am in too great a hurry to investigate. If I ran into you, I beg your pardon; if you ran into me don't mention it," and he tore away at redoubled speed.

Mr. Chas. B. Wayman, Erie, Pa., writes: "My physicians had given me up to die. They told me my lungs and liver were all decayed and gone. I was very weak, pale and emaciated. By chance I saw Brown's Iron Bitters advertised. I immediately realized that without iron in the blood, life could not exist. With trembling anxiety I sent a servant who procured for me a bottle. I must have taken it with great faith, for almost immediately I felt its beneficial effect. Soon all dyspeptic symptoms disappeared, my lungs grew strong, pains in the region of the heart vanished, my urine became free of sediment, and in a word I have regained perfect health. Now I feel able to thrash the doctor that attended me and really believe I ought to do it."

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid Liver to healthy action.

It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy on the liver and kidneys.

The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is most effective in starting the secretions of the Liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the Stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.
